

Design-construction interface problems in Saudi Arabia. Survey showed that working drawing details, unfamiliarity with local conditions and buildability ranked as highest interface problems

Al-Hammad, Abdulmohsen (King Fahd Univ of Petroleum and Minerals); Assaf, Sadi Source: Building Research and Information, v 20, n 1, Jan-Feb, 1992, p 60-63
ISSN: 0961-3218 CODEN: BREIEA

Abstract: During the last decade the construction industry in Saudi Arabia employed 15% of the total labour force and used 19% of energy consumed in the country. Abdulmohsen Al-Hammad and Sadi Assaf discuss the results of a survey which identified the interface problems in design and construction, and document the lessons to be learned from that boom period. (7 refs.)