

This paper presents a comparative study between three least squares-based state estimators. The study compares the performance of these estimators in identifying the presence of bad measurements of different types and magnitudes. Running a series of simulations with varying measurement redundancies assesses the performance of these estimators.